Nadine H. Alami is currently a doctoral candidate in Higher Education Administration at the George Washington University, and the Associate Editor of the National Cybersecurity Institute Journal at the National Cybersecurity Institute (NCI) in Washington, DC.

Ms. Alami is an experienced higher education practitioner who served as the Director of Student Affairs at the Modern University in Business and Science in Lebanon for more than seven years. In that capacity, Ms. Alami took part in a number of European Union funded TEMPUS and ERASMUS projects.
She holds a BS in Computer Science from the American University of Beirut and a Master of Business Administration from the Lebanese American University.

Areas of interest include: curriculum design, organizational structures and behaviors, international education, in addition to cybersecurity and STEM education.